The Secretary General then addressed the gathering bringing into focus the much debated topic 'The New Normal'. She further went on to wish the delegates best of luck and wished them a fruitful conference for the days to come. The Headmaster then elaborated on the important values that MUN incorporates in a student. Subsequently the SNAMUN'20 was declared open.

UNITED NATIONS SECURITY COUNCIL

The Security Council convened today to deliberate upon the crisis in Yemen. The lobbying session started as any normal marketplace would be; multiple people shouting at the same time trying to sell their ideas, until the delegate of France intervened and called for some sort of an organised talk, which much to her surprise, was taken over by the delegate of the United States of America .

Despite the numerous reiteration of the fact that this would not be made a political committee the delegate of Russia and

United States could not help but bring up skirmishes and turn it into a topic of heated debate. Unfortunately the formal committee session was not as lively a discussion as was expected. With most of the delegates focusing their speeches around the humanitarian crisis itself and the Arab spring and it's impacts on Yemen.

Most delegates however, did not keep in mind a holistic view of the problem. Nonetheless the first day of debate was fruitful and a more animated discussion is expected tomorrow.

UNITED NATIONS HUMAN RIGHTS COUNCIL

The committee kicked off with enthusiasm as the Executive Board introduced the agenda with few queries continuing till lunch. The calm of the orientation was soon replaced by the heat of the ice breaker session when the agenda itself got supporters and opponents and even the delegate of France's nail-biting speech didn't seem to help much.

The Human Rights Council had GSLs and caucuses, but mostly it had fights, between the Liberal and the Conservative, the non-sharia and the Sharia and the Pro - LGBT and the Anti - LGBT bloc. The discussions and their topics raised by the delegates of Rwanda, Syria and the United Kingdom reflected this.

Some nations stood in solidarity with the LGBTQ+ community while some stuck to homophobia. With this, the first day of the committee came to an end. The Chairperson found the arguments to be too unspecific and recommended better detail. Let us see what allegiances change overnight.

ALL INDIA POLITICAL PARTIES MEET

Students joke that "MUN is F-U-N" however it's true - that is why it works so well and most of the children want to be a part of it. Though this year is full of pandemonium but we tried to bring in some normalcy and FUN by conduction a virtual MUN to divert the young minds.

The All India Political Parties Meet witnessed a zealous participation from all the delegates.

These delegates adhered to their portfolios very dutifully especially Rajnath Singh, who staunchly replied to every comment in Hindi in the feel of the Defence Minister. Furthermore, the attire of Amit Shah truly reflected his personality and Modi Ji had his dialogues ready for his "mitron", that too in his dialect. Manish Sisodia and Kiren Rijiju were particularly convincing in their arguments.

The above - mentioned chaos was witnessed while shifting the delegates into their breakout rooms but the situation was handled patiently by all (very un-politician-like behaviour), thus keeping the fervour of the Conference intact. Altogether, every delegate made the first day of the committee a success.

WORLD ECONOMIC FORUM

The economic crisis unleashed by the outbreak of COVID 19 has its twinge on the economies. The pandemic has pushed the global economy into a recession. The economy starts shrinking and growth ceases. COVID - 19 related disruptions have led to millions filing for unemployment benefits. Various leaders and Businesspersons met today at the World Economic Forum to discuss a plan for post pandemic economic recovery.

Today's session included very articulate and commendable speeches from various representatives of the globe especially Satya Nadella, Imran Khan, Daniel Zhang and Lee Hsien Loong. The World Economic Forum was the only committee in the SNAMUN '20 having different procedural rules. This called for serious amplification by the Executive Board.

The speakers were then given five minutes each to give their opening statements, which will be followed by a short debating session on sub -agendas decided by the delegates tomorrow. Each and every delegate made the first day of this conference very successful.

YALTA CONFERENCE

World War II was an event so great in its magnitude, that every event within it, managed to change the course of history.

The Yalta Conference, also known as the Crimea Conference and code-named Argonaut and Magneto, was convoked by the heads of the United States of America, the United Kingdom, the Soviet Union and the Free French Forces today.

The conference started with a lobby session which definitely reflected the heat of the war being deliberated upon. After coming to consensus about what would be discussed in the coming days of the conference, the delegates gave an opening account about how the economy, naval front, border front, etc. would be taken care off.

There was also a pitch for a global organisation to deal with various issues and to maintain peace and help aid the countries deeply affected by the war. While most delegates were confident about taking down Hitler, Neville Henderson and FDR locked horns on many-a-occasions. Let's await another day to see what secrets this secret conference unearths.

AFRICAN UNION

The first of the African committee convened to discuss a roadmap for Agenda 2063, was indeed impressive and intense, where most of the delegates wanted to speak and take a stand with their points and solutions.

Right from General Speakers' List to various moderated caucuses, delegates had a lot to say pertaining to the socio-economic impact of COVID - 19 in successfully implementing the Agenda 2063 (Even the deliberate coughing by the delegates while the debate was on failed to trump this fervour).

All in all, despite facing numerous technical glitches during the online session the delegates were successful in presenting their arguments very vividly.

Immense patience shown by the EB, they made sure that every delegate was heard clearly. They also made sure that everyone got a chance to put their points on the floor. The first day of the conference was great and all eyes are set on what the committee offers in the coming two days.

OECD GLOBAL FORUM ON DEVELOPMENT

An online conference can never solve all issues in terms of technical glitches, lagging videos and delegates missing.

The lobbying session for the OECD started on a chaotic note, making one wonder if they would have to use earplugs to block out the noise. Eventually the disarray died down, owing to the timely interference of the co - chair.

The committee started with everyone seconding to a General Speakers' List and adopting the agenda "Commercialisation of Space". It was a sight not to be missed when the delegate of Russia's GSL speech gave competition to Eminem's famous rap songs. After a break the committee switched over to a moderated caucus.

Despite hiccups- like delegates sending chits to another committee, slow internet connections and many delegates reading speeches from their screens. It was a day of fruitful debates and discussions and there is a lot more to look forward to in the coming days.

THANK YOU!!

UNITED NATIONS SECURITY COUNCIL

While the third committee session started off with an unmoderated caucus as the delegates waited with great patience for their President to arrive, the delegate of the United States swooped in swiftly to masquerade as the unofficial President. The formal session today revolved around the point of the role of non state actors and their stakeholder – ship in the crisis.

However the bone of discussion throughout the conference was less of the humanitarian crisis and more of the delegates of the United States and Russia condemning each other. As was apparent in the unofficial sessions, the rivalry between them was truly intense. Several other delegates such as the delegate of Indonesia, Iraq and St Vincent and Grenadines struggled to make their exceptional points which were, however, overshadowed by the other nuance of the committee.

The delegate of Yemen took an extremely neutral stance and maintained focus on the solutions. All in all the debate was extremely productive and the delegates managed to reach to some kind of a consensus; which in length will be discussed during the committee sessions of day three.

UNHRC

Second day is always the most awaited day for the committee as most of the developments take place, it can be a turning point for the events that happened the previous day.

This day started with resuming the general speakers list. Followed by numerous moderated and unmoderated caucuses, to the topics of which the delegates couldn't disagree more. The delegates eventually chose to divide themselves into different breakout rooms according to their allegiances.

In spite of many tries by the delegates of Hungary, DRC and Pakistan, the committee refused to come to consensus over topics for discussion. Eventually, the committee managed to have a long and healthy session of the moderated caucus on the topic "Discrimination faced by the LGBTQ community in various sector", before dispersing into an unmoderated caucus to make the working paper. The committee was adjourned after the completion of the working papers. We hope to see a more organized final day of committee as delegates propose solutions and organise them into resolutions.

WORLD ECONOMIC FORUM

Today's sessions were elaborate and exhilarating, but at the same time interesting and productive. After exhausting the speakers list, the committee moved into a formal debate where the sub agendas were voted upon.

A total of 3 sub-agendas were discussed today, related to the Global pandemic of the corona virus which were - various short term and long term economic plans, technology and global financial marketing with respect to the COVID -19 pandemic and different ways of job creation. The committee saw impressive participation and heated debate and the arguments of Angela Merkel, Donald Trump and Daniel Zhang were particularly note-worthy.

While discussing the last agenda, the President was considerate enough to reduce the time limit (though it was only a trick to assess delegates' research.) Let's see if the delegates are successful in coming up with a plan of solution on the last day of committee.

THE YALTA CONFERENCE

The second day of the Yalta Conference began with a few technical hiccups with a new OC Member joining the committee, but thereafter, it was smooth and sailing (or at least the committee tried to do so). The committee kicked off with a General Speakers List. The main focus of all delegates speaking in the first half was 'Germany must atone for its war sins'.

Between Neville Henderson's eagerness to jump at every opportunity he got to speak and delegates failing to come to a consensus about the topic they'd like to discuss, the day went on quite uneventfully. As ironical as it sounds, the mishaps in the committee were the only happenings taking place.

We did get some action during the unmoderated caucus where a heated debate occurred among the likes of Molotov, Neville Henderson, Roosevelt and Stalin. It is to be noted only one Moderated Caucus was held and most motions were rejected. As brought to the notice of the delegates by the Executive Board, the quality of debate did not match to that of yesterday's discussion. Our deepest condolences to all those fifteen motions that could not be passed because of the one deciding vote.

However, the committee ended on a positive note as the delegates finally reached to a consensus on a moderated caucus. All the issues of the committee were addressed by the Executive Board that left the delegates exhilarated for the next day!

AIPPM

Abiding with the spirit of the first day, the delegates of the All India Political Parties Meet charged the session with tremendous zeal and enthusiasm on the second day as well. The debate was acrimonious, enriching and the atmosphere of the session seemed to be drowned with the convicting voices of the delegates.

The lobbying session however, was chaotic, again like the previous day and multiple people continued voicing themselves at the same time in a disorderly fashion. Interestingly enough, Kapil Sibal and Amit Shah seemed to be having a conversation of their own that looked less like talk and more like a squabble. Sonia Gandhi on the other hand, used his riveting facial expressions to add to the session.

JP Nadda, of course, was bombarded with intense questions making the session exhilarating. All in all the committee session remains unmatched, ending the second day on a positive and enthralling note and leaving us all wondering what politics will be played on the final day of committee tomorrow.

OECD

Space is no longer only accessible to a few countries. In our interconnected world, more than 80 countries have registered satellites into orbit. These countries have assembled together in the OECD conference to discuss how to commercialise space.

Many countries suggested that personalising it would be a good option. Where minerals extracted from various natural satellites would be viable if the resources are available. There is no denying that USA and Russia are extremely advanced when it comes to technology, let's not forget they were the first both countries were pioneers in putting a man on the moon and sending a man to space (doesn't mean that you get complete dominance for that though.)

They exploited this history to their advantage to lead the committee. Let's see what ideas will come up during the last committee sessions or will the entire project go Apollo 13.

THE AFRICAN UNION

The second day of the committee African Union was off to a good start with great and substantial debates amongst the delegates. Discussions were placed on the different aspects of education, technology, security and food distribution and women and child exploitation across the nation of Africa. There was great participation and enthusiasm amongst the delegates.

An effective set of solutions was presented before the committee that were suggested by every delegate and it was impressive to see how delegates supported each other and gave a chance to others to share their opinion. We are definitely looking at a unified Africa to progress and develop despite the challenges thrown by the pandemic.

The executive board members were also impressed at how many delegates were active and wanted a chance to be recognised. All in all, it was an interesting and substantial second day.

LIGHTS, CAMERA, ACTION!

SPILL THE BEANS

The Press held an interview with Franklin D. Roosevelt, Nevile Henderson and Vyacheslav Molotov, who were convened at the Yalta Conference. These leaders seemed to be unusually comfortable with the press and did not hesitate in leaking out some important secret information to it.

The first question was aimed at Henderson, who seemed very confident that Germany will adopt any and all policies that the Allies tell them to- the press questioned this ignorance. But Neville Henderson reiterated his hatred of Adolf Hitler, and did not mind in overestimating his idiocy. He also felt that his diplomatic and imperialist outlook will do enough to trump Hitler's motivation.

Mr. Molotov was asked about USSR's response to German expansion towards Soviet territories and he was quick to state pacts to counter the same and felt sure that Hitler needed to be crushed and USSR will be able do it.

FDR was asked about America's atom bomb program and FDR immediately spilled the tea and told the press all about the Manhattan Project only to regret it much later. The cat was let out of the bag in front of the Press as well a USSR representative (quite an impressive way to declassify a secret project). Who would know an interview could change the course of history?

The Chief Guest then gave a speech about the role of the UN in the world and shared his own experiences from there. He also congratulated the delegates.

The conference was subsequently declared closed by her. This conference indeed had a lot to teach and this closing ceremony was its most befitting ending.

SEVEN WONDERS OF SNAMUN'20 THE FINAL EPISODE...

UNITED NATIONS HUMAN RIGHTS COUNCIL

The final day being the most crucial one started by resuming the General Speakers List. Each delegate had last minute stances to take, with the drafting of resolutions in full swing.

This was followed by an unmoderated caucus to draft the working papers. The motion for discussion on working paper 3.0 (the conservative document) was the first to be passed and discussion happened through points of information.

The sponsors- Iran, Senegal, Bangladesh, Pakistan and Saudi Arabia were quick to answer any and all questions. Following this was the discussion of the working paper of the Liberal bloc, authored by Russia, China, Rwanda and Denmark and more questions.

The committee ended with the positive feedback by the executive board. The committee was engaging and enthusiastic throughout. The only thing that did not happen was friendship between the Conservative and the Liberal sides- better luck next time!

WORLD ECONOMIC FORUM

This is it- our final words to you in 2020. The World Economic Forum debated to bring out a plan for economic recovery. The initial part of the session began with resuming speakers' list, to which the delegates had very unusual questions. The committee was then divided by the President into three groups to finish their working papers, which eventually formed the base for the final discussions in the committee.

Since all working papers had their pros and cons they were merged into one document which was ultimately passed by the committee. Safe to say that the committee came to a unanimous conclusion. The world needs to become more global, open and liberal in its trade policies to counter the threat of unemployment and labour market crisis.

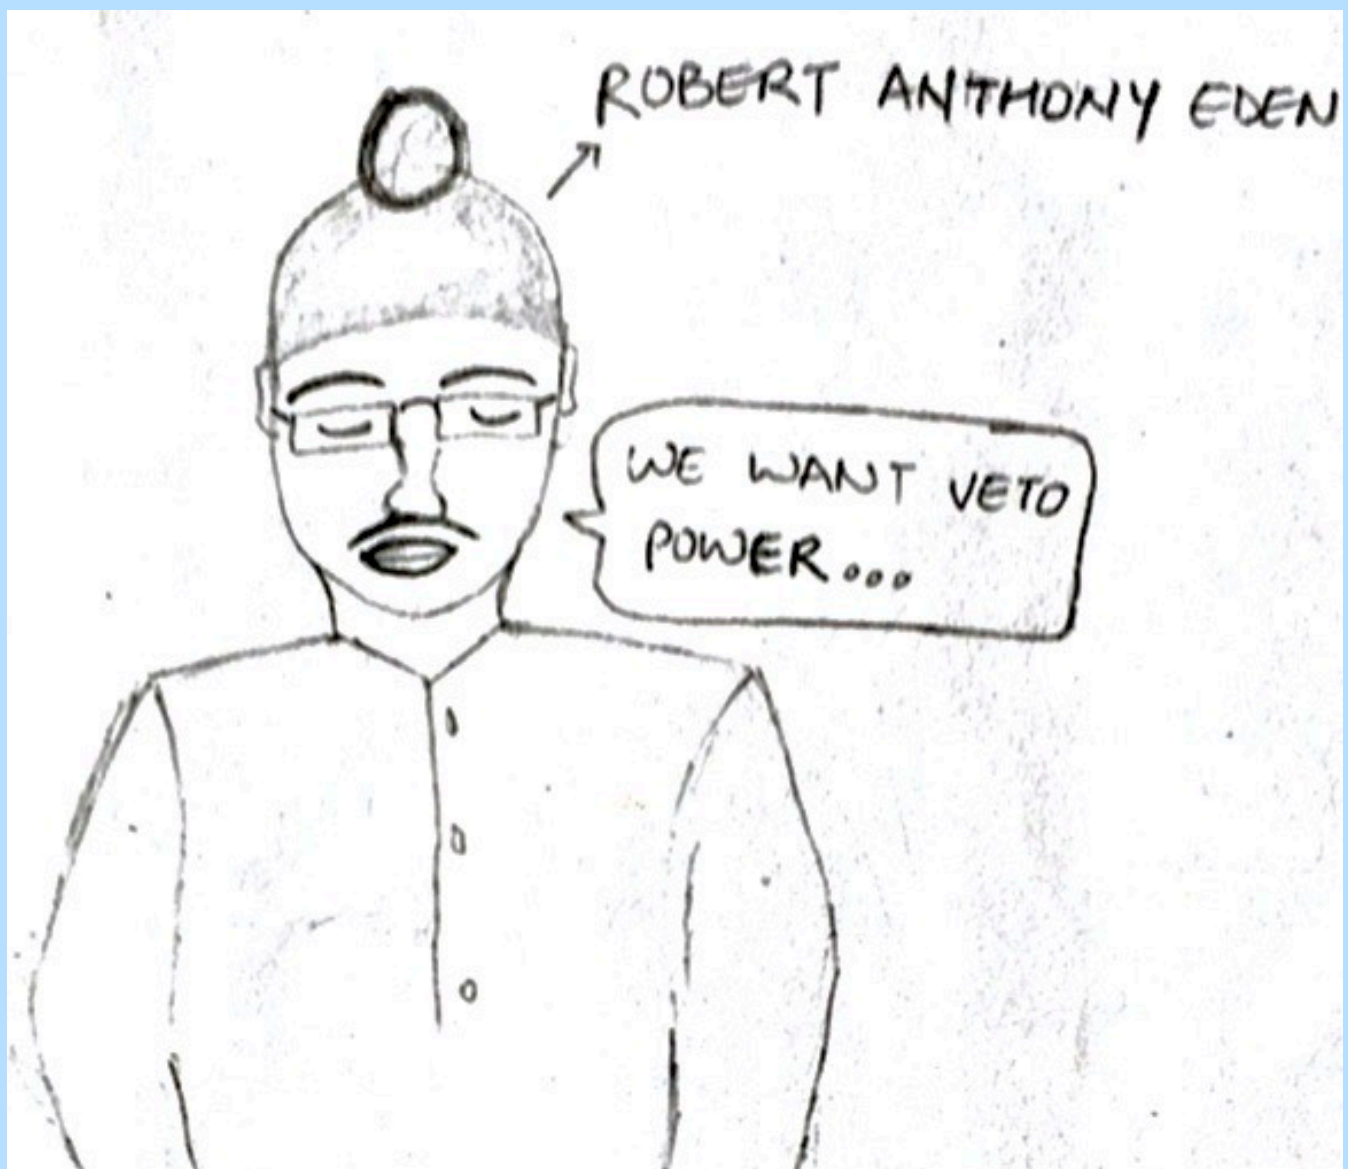

Moreover a calibrated approach to automation should be adopted since the potential adverse impact of automation on inequality and job loss cannot be overruled. Donald Trump, Han Zheng and Lee Hsien Loong topped the list of enthusiasm. The committee ended on a positive note with the feedback from the President, who was fairly impressed by the performance. This committee had game – players (quite literally) and game changers (again quite literally), but left us all a little wiser and with tons of memories.

THE YALTA CONFERENCE

The third and the final day of the Yalta Conference was a very interesting one and as quoted by the EB 'better than the second day'. The day started with a GSL and more motions were passed as compared to yesterday.

A larger and more substantial group of issues like formation of the United Nations, who will get veto power, the Polish Democracy crisis and free elections in the Eastern European countries made it to the table today. Picking up pace, it was decided that a Report was to be formed. On the formation of the same a concluding GSL was held. Putting rappers to shame was Neville Henderson and his speeches.

The committee ended on a good note despite the technical hiccups faced through the three days of the conference. The committee was put to an end on a positive note with the Executive Board's feedback.

ALL INDIA POLITICAL PARTIES MEET

The final day of the All India Political Parties Meet continued with the same level of enthusiasm and energetic debate. Spirits were high; and with well backed research, the level of debate too proved to be intense and invigorating. In the session the delegates debated over the new educational policy. T he morning session started off with Akhilesh Yadav giving his strong opening speech, which was then later followed by the discussion over the press releases. Sonia Gandhi chose to keep himself busy by grabbing a snack, rather than engaging in debate. Mr. Asaduddin Owaisi felt that being a politician gave him different constitutional rights, soon leading to flared up debate. Each leader gave in their very best and made the session an extremely enriching one.

Moreover, the committee session taught each and every delegate about the forces that govern our country and most of all, how you as a person react to the actual issues that plague our educational policy. It gives hope to each one of us to see that teenagers dare to do what qualified adults do not. On this note, the committee came to an end.

THE AFRICAN UNION

The final day of the African Union started in the best way it could with all delegates coming to progressive conclusions and solutions. The committee was bound in a unified knot while proposing solutions for a common homeland and to improve and expand the implementation of a plan that would benefit all African nations likewise.

And yet the committee saw its differences as superior and had two blocks with multiple countries putting forward their working papers and resolutions, which were both discussed quite thoroughly and had everyone's contribution logged in (especially interesting arguments from the delegates of Kenya, Nigeria and Mauritius)

The African Union's delegates and executive board, both showed great persistence, patience and impressive amount of enthusiasm and worked hard to overcome the drawbacks of an online conference. This committee was a total success and all delegates enjoyed and learnt equally and all of us go back with new acquaintances and many more new friends.

OECD GLOBAL FORUM ON DEVELOPMENT

The last day of the conference was the most awaited and the most dependable for the OECD Global Forum on Development. It saw the concluding points on the topics discussed on previous days. Privatisation and commercialisation of space remained epicentres of discussion.

The delegates laid emphasis on three outcomes- taxation and corporate policies with space commercialisation, development security and principles of liability and sustainability, which further include space, environmental and ethical concerns. The committee was divided into three groups and points were put under each outcome topic. Delegates debated on each topic where exceptional points were outlined by the delegates of China and Russia.

This committee highlighted the growing importance of space activities for the economy, for developing country strategies for the pursuit of knowledge and scientific discoveries, and for society in general. When it came to the resolutions the delegates put up a good fight to defend their forte of solutions. Unfortunately no resolution was passed by the committee. All in all the committee did not lose its zeal and underlying humour (especially South Korea) and edified us in depth on the agenda and beyond.

UNITED NATIONS SECURITY COUNCIL

While the third committee session started off with an unmoderated caucus as the delegates waited with great patience for their President to arrive, the delegate of the United States swooped in swiftly to masquerade as the unofficial President. The formal session today revolved around the point of the role of non state actors and their stakeholder – ship in the crisis.

However the bone of discussion throughout the conference was less of the humanitarian crisis and more of the delegates of the United States and Russia condemning each other. As was apparent in the unofficial sessions, the rivalry between them was truly intense. Several other delegates such as the delegate of Indonesia, Iraq and St Vincent and Grenadines struggled to make their exceptional points which were, however, overshadowed by the other nuance of the committee.

The delegate of Yemen took an extremely neutral stance and maintained focus on the solutions. All in all the debate was extremely productive and the delegates managed to reach to some kind of a consensus; which in length will be discussed during the committee sessions of day three.
